Part 3: Translation

Translate the following passage into Urdu (20 marks).

We react to music from early childhood, even young babies can show connection with music. They respond to rhythm before they have any language to express themselves. Songs and poems are used to calm babies when they are upset.

It is almost impossible for young people not to like music. Even if the person doesn't know anything about music or how to play an instrument, there will always be some words or melody that will stick in their head enough for them to be able to sing or hum popular songs. With the development of new music technology you don't need to be a trained musician or own expensive instruments to create your own songs.

A piece of music can make you happy or sad. Music can have a big effect on people's lives. It can provide great moments with friends or be your support when you are alone. Even if you cannot express what you are feeling in your own words, you can choose a suitable song instead to express your feelings and to communicate with other people even if they cannot speak your language. Music itself is a universal language.
